Photoshop Features Photoshop's editing process is divided into several different types of tools: Fill Blur Lighting Adjustments Filter Pattern Brush Select Grow Rotate Saving Mask Layer effects Color balance There is a lot of Photoshop information on the internet. The one big difference between this article and others is that we are going to give you a visual overview of Photoshop, explain what the different tools do, and how to use each tool to their fullest potential. Fill Fill: Fill can be used to replace an area of color with another color. When filled, it will use the specified color options (either a spot, gradient, or pattern) and overlay them to the specified area. You can also choose to change the blending mode. Figure 1: Toolbar for choosing a fill pattern Blur Blur is used to soften the image. This is like a pencil drawing, where the soft, blended lines are the overall look. Figure 2: Toolbar for blurring an image Lighting Lighting is used to add light to the image. This can add dramatic shadows and reflections to the image to help it look sharp. Figure 3: Toolbar for lighting an image Adjustments Adjustments are used to modify the look of an image. These can make the image look brighter or darker, add film-like texture, or change colors or tones. Figure 4: Toolbar for making adjustments Filter Filters can be used to adjust colors in an image. This can be used as a last resort when using a little too much fill and the picture is completely covered with one color. Figure 5: Toolbar for applying filters Pattern Pattern is used to make an image look like a painting. This is done using a set of guidelines. Each section of the image is one of the guidelines (one set of dots, solid lines, or an overlaid shape that outlines a color). The areas of the image that are in between the guidelines are filled with the chosen color. Figure 6: Toolbar for creating a pattern in an image Brush Brush is used to select an area of an image, usually to enlarge or edit. Brush

Homeland Security secretary defends lack of Syrian refugees on Fox News Sunday on Sunday, March 25, 2016 01:30 PM EDT
Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson defended his agency's decision to reject the Obama administration's plan to accept 10,000 Syrian refugees for resettlement during an appearance on Fox News Sunday. Appearing on the network's "Weekend Varney" program, Johnson said last weekend's terror attacks in Brussels made the plan untenable. "The risk of losing a single American, or of disrupting our homeland security, not just in this country but around the world, is so great that it was clearly not a responsible thing to do," Johnson said. Referring to the plan, Johnson said, "We were having a discussion on how do you manage the changes that are made and absorb the people who are moving to our country. What we were doing was we were changing the makeup of the country. We were doing something that we had not done in almost five decades." Get Breaking News Delivered to Your Inbox "So there is no longer a smart way to just accept 10,000 Syrians," Johnson said. The 10,000 refugees are being offered to the United States as part of the Obama administration's "Global Resettlement Initiative." But many lawmakers say the plan is too costly and could strain U.S. security. "When terrorists like this new group that was formed this week do what they have done all around the world in Europe, and commit acts of terror in this country, they are going to make the country stronger, and this is a radical attempt to weaken us," Sen. Ted Cruz, R-Texas, told CBS' "Face the Nation" last week. "So while it's very sad that people have lost their lives in Europe, we need to recognize that it is only because of the work of brave European citizens, and we have a clear duty to assist them, and we must not simply stand by and do nothing," Cruz said. Reacting to the news that the U.S. will not accept the 10,000 Syrian refugees, The Christian Science Monitor's Daoud Kuttub wrote in an op-ed published earlier this week, "Some conservatives say Obama should have dropped the program all together, but that's ignoring the fact that it is in the best interest of the United States to help as many of these refugees as possible. And they are the majority of the 10,000 asylum seekers
